An indignant parent lately complained of the severe tasks which school children are compelled to accomplish. The complaint is well founded Whether education or mere discipline is the object of attendance at school, neither justifies the physical constraint and mental exertion so which hundreds of thousands of chilan are anhiected every day. Few solbealth and spirit, the custom grons mo. popular with teachers to make school rs merely the time for recitation, the essons to be studied at home. After six hours spent in the school room, and from four to six at study at home, how much time and inclination has a child for recreation? Parents should remember that they have rightfully a voice upby their children, and should refuse to allow home to be turned into a school room unless they are themselves going to officiate as teachers, and save their children from double restraint and don-
